ABSOLUTE DEFIANCE.

The address of President Wilson in Baltimore was by all odds the best he has made. It ripped the velvet neatly off and revealed what Germany alone is known to respect, the iron hand.

"Germany," concluded the president, "has said that force and force alone shall decide whether justice or peace shall reign in the affairs of men, whether right as America conceives it or dominion as she conceives it shall determine the destinies of mankind."

"There is therefore but one response possible from us! Force, force to the utmost, force without stint or limit!" Small wonder that the crowd that heard him cheered itself hoarse when he had finished. The president indeed had interpreted the American soul.

The principal contribution of the Baltimore address is a restoration of the high tone of resolve and determination to our public diplomacy. That tone had been unfortunately weakened by the address of February 11, to the disadvantage of America's cause at home, in the countries of her allies and in Central Europe. America had been put in the position of a nation that might or might not fight it through, that might or might not co-operate unreservedly with her allies, that might at any time by a few specious words be led into demoralizing debate to her own grave injury. There can no longer exist any impression of that sort. The president's words admit of not the slightest misconstruction or doubt. They represent, not in heat but in absolute fairness, the conviction of America that we may rely on force and force alone to save the world from submitting to a German yoke. They represent, too, the solemn willingness that is not wholly remote from eagerness to prove to the tyrant the quality of our force.

Though the president reiterates his readiness to talk peace whenever there is any reason to believe a peace of justice is sincerely desired, he makes wholly clear his comprehension that not an ocean of words could make Germany's desire for peace seem based on justice now. Though he draws what appears to be a wholly vain distinction between German statesmen and German militarists (the statesmen are merely more fox than the generals), he omits altogether any reference to war against the imperial German government, and speaks instead of Germany. He quite deliciously ignores Germany's jumping jack, Count Czernin, and looks neither to Vienna nor Berlin, but to Brest-Litovsk for his facts.

The president will find he has accomplished more toward uniting the country back of him by one plain spoken and unqualified defiance than by all the talk of a pacifist millennium that has figured in certain earlier statements.

With the Woodrow Wilson who accepts Germany's challenge as he accepted it at Baltimore, and who calls for the execution of democracy's will by force, force and yet more force. The Journal is ready to go the limit. If it was deemed worth while to circulate previous addresses of the president behind the enemy lines as propaganda, surely that delicate attention ought not to be omitted now. This thing is beginning to look like a fight.

federation. It seems that the new federation is antagonistic to the league, and Mr. Anderson appears to be quite ready to quarrel with it. The Globe is not greatly concerned about that, but as a purveyor of information it is bound to note what Mr. Anderson says about Mr. Bryan, one of our greatest apostles of prohibition and temperance. After explaining that Mr. Bryan had assured the Anti-Saloon League that he would not accept the presidency of the dry federation unless the Anti-Saloon League and the W. C. T. U. were a part of it, Mr. Anderson delivers the following estimate of the Nebraska:

As an eloquent speaker in behalf of the prohibition movement, a man who brings out a crowd and who can persuade and convince a great many members of that crowd, Mr. Bryan is a most highly desirable addition to the temperance ranks. But as a leader, as a supposed strategist, as a general, as one charged with responsibility for planning, Mr. Bryan is frankly a joke so far as the prohibition movement is concerned.

In other words, Mr. Anderson's opinion is that Mr. Bryan is long on eloquence and short on practical leadership. Mr. Anderson is glad to have Mr. Bryan expend his eloquence in behalf of prohibition, though he is "a late comer in the prohibition ranks," as he was "late in taking the American side of our controversy with Germany," but it has no faith in his equipment for effective practical work. Indeed, Mr. Anderson suspects that the chief purpose of the dry federation is to get some kind of a national prohibition organization behind Mr. Bryan, in order that he may make another bid for the presidency in 1920, with prohibition as the issue.

Mr. Anderson is a shrewd man, and his guess does not sound unreasonable. Mr. Bryan is not yet too old for another try at the presidency. And it isn't the first time that he has been called a joke.

THE HOUR.

How smoothly we have slipped into the new order of things that requires us to rise an hour earlier in the morning, and, perforce, to retire approximately an hour earlier in the evening—how smoothly and readily, though we carry in our consciousness the knowledge that it is all part of a genial hoax, that things are not as they seem.

By a quite preposterous matter of enactment, which does not, Joshua-like, compel the sun to stand still but which legislates our world an hour ahead. We achieve certain economic savings. If the experience of other countries is duplicated, we shall achieve also moral and therefore in the long run spiritual savings. The idea had nothing in its favor from the beginning except sense. It has nothing at all in its favor today except that it works. And the root of all its success is in easy human adaptability.

How hopeful for civilization it is that man has now reached the stage at which he cannot even be laughed out of a benefit. How futile, in view of that astounding proof, to think he can be fought out of it. How interesting, incidentally, is man.

In England the people had the alternatives of getting efficient war work out of their government or changing it. They eventually changed it. In America the alternative does not exist; the only course open is to make the existing government deliver the goods. The people are slowly winning some successes along that line.

Some of the papers are still attacking the "smallness" of the campaign conducted in Wisconsin for the democratic nominee by the "small" American vice president. Still, it was a large man who knew his dimensions who sent him there.

History gives rise to no more interesting speculation than as to how Israel Putnam, who never fired until he saw the whites of their eyes, would get along as battery commander of seventy-six-mile guns.

This much at least must be said of the colonel, that if he is playing to any extent for votes in the future it is not for anti-American votes.

On the contrary, Tennessee has far the best of it under the daylight saving law. In this state we save Tennessee daylight.

"Well, anyhow, that airplane we have succeeded in sending to France is a good one." "Let us be thankful for that."

Fortunate it is that the rooster at 3 a. m., has not the same power for continuance in song that nature has given the robin.

The American people must all hang together or the Kaiser may hang them all separately.

We may be behind in guns, men, ships and planes, but we are strictly up to the minute in promises.

PLEASANT GREEN BAPTIST

The U. S. Government is still drawing on Pleasant Green Church and Sunday school. Up until the past few days we have sent into training camp four Christian teachers and scholars. They were as follows: Messrs. S. Q. Marshall, Henry Glenn, J. L. Grooms and William Deadrick. Now they have made their fifth selection from us in the person of Mr. Early Marshall, who has been and always will be near and dear to us yet in a distant land. Uncle Sam is breaking into our Metoka ranks. So we as Metokas must close up the gaps and make ready material for the Government wants men, physically, mentally and spiritually strong as well as the church and they are taking just such material as that from us. We can say that these are our precious jewels. We point to those who have gone with a mother's unbounded pride, when the church and Sunday school has exhausted itself with the exhibition of its treasures, we spread in view our flag and say as the mother of Gracchi, "These are our jewels." We follow them with our prayers, dedicating them to the supreme task for which they are dedicating their own lives on the battle field. Since these things are true, let us as Christians and Metokas press forward and go into the highways and hedges and compel men to follow in the footsteps of those who have gone into actual service.

The Metoka Class will meet at Bro. Joseph Baugh's home, Wednesday night at 7:30, April 17th, 1918 14th Avenue, North. Come all who have ever been Metokas, we have great things to tell you at this meeting. Of course we suspended our meetings during our revival of which was quite a success.

H. D. Black, Pres. Metoka Class.

A. AND I. STATE NORMAL SUMMER SCHOOL.

Applications for the State Normal School, which will be conducted from June 13 to July 19, are being constantly received and the outlook for a large attendance is exceedingly promising. A special effort is being made to adopt the course of study in conformity with the most essential needs which this particular occasion necessitates and which is in harmony with the endeavor and duty of every loyal and patriotic citizen during the present crisis of our country.

BROOM-MAKING AT NORMAL.

The manufacturing of brooms has been recently established at this institution. One occupant from each room of both the girls and boys is required to make their own broom, under the direction of Miss C. O. Mitchell, head of the Domestic Art Department. In this measure brooms used in the different departments of the institution are made by student labor. This improvement along with the other constant work of making the school a more efficient and helpful agency along the vocational educational lines is of inestimable value to this state institution from a pecuniary viewpoint and from the knowledge of broom-making acquired by the students.

Mrs. Thurman had been in bad health for a year and was confined to her bed for about six weeks before the end came. Mrs. Thurman had given thirty-six years of her life in active work for temperance and is well and favorably known in every state in the Union. Her demise is deeply deplored as it leaves a vacancy in temperance ranks that will be very hard to fill.
